The ability to work from home benefits everyone, including employees, Wells Fargo, and the planet. While many companies are embracing new work-from-home models, Wells Fargo is regressing in its progress and even penalizing employees. We demand Wells Fargo do what's right for its employees and the planet and allow employees to work at least 3 days a week remotely.

According to a recent survey, workers spend an average of 239 hours commuting yearly. That is equal to almost 10 straight days spent in your car just to get to work. In addition, The average commuter in the U.S. spends $8,466 and about 19% of their annual income on their commute every year. The ability to work remotely allows us to cut back on this unnecessary expense while providing us with a better work-life balance, all at no cost to the company.

Not only is working remotely better for your bank account, but it's also better for the planet.

Did you know commuting accounts for 90% of greenhouse gas emissions in the US? In fact, in 2020, as most businesses started to operate remotely, carbon dioxide emissions from transportation were reduced by 15%, resulting in increased air quality.
